STATEMENT, IDENTITY, AND INTEREST OF *AMICI CURIAE*¹

Amici are three organizations that serve the art museum community (the Association of Art Museum Directors, the American Alliance of Museums, and the College Art Association) and 94 art museums located throughout the United States.² The mission of the museums, supported by the organizations, is to serve the public by making great works of art, representing the full range of human experiences, available to a wide audience. This mission is threatened by Executive Order 13,780 (the “Order”), which will prevent museums in the United States from presenting certain works of art and performances that reflect the experiences of people from the six countries covered by the Order, as well as from other parts of the world.

The Order has already caused some of the amici museums to cancel or postpone planned exhibitions. These exhibitions, which would have showcased important works by artists from the covered countries, are not going forward as planned because the artists themselves, or other necessary personnel (such as the lenders, collectors, couriers, and curators), would not be able to travel to the United States under the Order. Even artists and other contributors not directly covered by the Order have canceled museum events in the United States because of the uncertainty and fear that the Order has created for many foreign nationals. By limiting the range of artistic expression available in the United States, the Order will continue to cause substantial and irreparable harm to the amici and the American public.

¹ The parties have provided consent for all timely filed amicus briefs pursuant to Rule 29(a)(2), and amici curiae file this brief pursuant to that authority. No counsel for a party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no such counsel or party made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. No person other than the amici curiae or their counsel made a monetary contribution to the preparation or submission of this brief.

This brief describes a recent performance in the United States that would not have occurred had the Order been in place at that time, as well as planned exhibitions and performances that are now jeopardized by the Order.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

“[T]he life of the arts, far from being an interruption, a distraction, in the life of a nation, is very close to the center of a nation’s purpose—and is a test of the quality of a nation’s civilization.”³

Art has played a pivotal role in defining the United States since its inception. As the primary means by which the public experiences art, museums are an anchor of American culture and democratic society. By fostering creativity, tolerance, and cultural enrichment, our museums promote American values, both at home and abroad.

The amici museums serve the American public by presenting visual arts and performances that cover the full range of human artistic expression. In support of this mission, the amici museums regularly host exhibitions with international impact that welcome artists, performers, and visitors from the United States and other countries. These exhibitions foster important cross-cultural exchanges and spark healthy public discussions, which are now threatened by the Order.

On January 27, 2017, President Donald J. Trump signed Executive Order 13,769, which suspended for 90 days “immigrant and nonimmigrant entry into the United States of aliens” from seven predominantly Muslim countries.⁴ Following several successful legal challenges to that order, on March 6, 2017, the President issued Executive Order 13,780, which went into effect on March 16, 2017, and bars (with certain exceptions) the nationals of six Muslim-majority countries—Iran, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, Syria, and Yemen (the “Designated Countries”)—from entering the United States until at least July 2017.⁵

³ John F. Kennedy, The Arts in America, Look, Dec. 18, 1962, at 106.

⁴ Exec. Order No. 13,769, 82 Fed. Reg. 8,977 (Feb. 1, 2017).

The Order will have a significant negative impact on the amici’s ability to conduct the kind of cross-cultural, dynamic global exchanges that make Americans more informed, and thereby, America stronger. Many of these exhibitions and performances are dependent upon the presence of participants who are citizens of one of the Designated Countries. The negative effects of the Order are already being felt, as several museums have postponed or canceled future exhibitions that require foreign artists, lenders, collectors, curators, scholars, couriers, and others whose ability to contribute can no longer be assured.⁶

One of the primary objectives of the Order is “to protect . . . citizens from terrorist attacks.”⁷ For many foreign artists, their work is a vehicle for political dissent and social commentary, and is frequently among the most effective critiques of the inequities in their countries and the corruption in their governments. By denying entry to all nationals from six predominately Muslim countries, the Order will limit the kinds of international collaboration and artistic expression that foster tolerance and understanding of others, which help protect us from the very threats the Order is intended to mitigate.

ARGUMENT

A successful art exhibition or performance represents the culmination of the time, talent, and expense of dozens of individuals. The amici museums cannot commit to launching a significant exhibition or performance if there is a substantial risk that one or more of the key persons involved will not be able to contribute as required.

Although the Order’s ban on travel purports to be temporary, it can be renewed, leaving many of the amici unable to commit to exhibitions or performances involving artists, scholars, or curators from the Designated Countries. The loss of these art projects causes substantial harm to the amici and the public in general. It does so by depriving Americans of important works of art, great performances, and scholarly presentations, thereby denying them opportunities to gain insights into the history, culture, and aspirations of the people of the Designated Countries.

In addressing the Order's violation of the Establishment Clause, the District Court correctly stated that it is in the public interest to "avoid sowing seeds of division in our nation."⁸ As the examples below illustrate, many of the art exhibitions that will not be shown and performances that will not occur because of the Order promote the kind of understanding that makes us less divided and less prone to conflict.

A. An Important Performance That Would Not Have Occurred at the Cleveland Museum of Art

As part of its mission, the Cleveland Museum of Art ("CMA") organizes performances of musicians and other artists from many areas of the world. At these events, thousands of people are able to hear, see, and experience music, dance, and film from across the globe. In the recent past, these performances have included at least one artist from a Designated Country, who would not have been able to participate had the Order been in place at that time. Through his performance, the musician exposed the large audience to musical traditions from the Designated Countries and, by fusing Eastern and Western genres, promoted understanding and tolerance of individuals from the Designated Countries generally. If the Order had been in effect at that time, CMA's efforts to provide the public with the most diverse, inspiring, and thought-provoking music from around the world would have been curtailed.

B. The Risk to a Future Exhibition: Persian Art Exhibition at the Museum of Fine Arts Houston

The Order will also harm exhibitions that were to include art collections created or owned by nationals of the Designated Countries. These exhibitions often require site visits by foreign nationals, including representatives of the individuals or institutions who own the collections, scholars who write and speak about the art, curators who co-organize the exhibitions, and couriers and conservators who accompany and protect the artworks.

Currently, the Museum of Fine Arts Houston ("MFA Houston") is preparing an exhibition and catalogue of Persian art from antiquity to the nineteenth century—made possible by the loans from an Iranian expatriate, who has an Iranian passport and has assembled the collection for over fifty years. There are now no assurances that the exhibition will go forward because the Order jeopardizes the presence of the collection's lender, foreign scholars, and others integral to the process of mounting such an extensive exhibition. If the exhibition is canceled, the American public will be denied the opportunity to view this historical collection of artwork, which provides an invaluable window into one of the world's greatest cultures.

The full consequences of the Order to the amici can only be appreciated by multiplying this example many times over. Other similar exhibitions and events will either be canceled, or never planned at all, because lenders, curators, and scholars will be unable to attend the exhibitions, speak at the openings, and work with their American colleagues on the catalogues in the United States.

C. The Order's "Chilling Effects" Will Have a Detrimental Effect on Amici and the American Public

The text of the Order provides that it is applicable only to citizens of the Designated Countries, but its effects would not be so limited. Nationals of the six Designated Countries—the foreign artists, lenders, curators, scholars, couriers, and conservators who make these exhibitions possible—live all over the world. Many of them, although not directly covered by the Order, are unwilling to travel to the United States because of the perceived risks associated with attempting to enter the country and a sense of animus that the Order has created toward people from certain countries.

Prominent sculptor Parviz Tanavoli—a dual-national of Iran and Canada—has decided that although one of his sculptures is currently on display at New York's Museum of Modern Art, he will not be traveling to the United States in part

“to avoid the risk of being held and interrogated just because I was born in Iran.”⁹

Tanavoli has been hailed as “an Iranian cultural ambassador and described as one of the most prominent contemporary artists in the Middle East.”¹⁰ He has previously been detained in Iran and accused of “disturbing the public peace” because of his provocative artwork.¹¹

The Portland Art Museum similarly has become concerned about its ability to obtain the proper visas for internationally renowned Syrian calligrapher, Khaled Al-Saa’i. Al-Saa’i uses Arabic calligraphy as a medium of expression to create dramatic abstract compositions, such as a mural representing the Syrian civil war.¹² He has previously exhibited in the United States and has taught as visiting faculty at several American institutions. Al-Saa’i is slated to create a mural covering the Portland Art Museum's indoor sculpture court, but that is now in question due to the Order.

These examples, which are by no means exhaustive, will grow in number so long as the Order continues to create uncertainty and fear for those foreign artists and other necessary participants who would otherwise contribute to exhibitions and performances in the United States.

D. The Waiver Provision Does Not Prevent This Harm

The Order's waiver provisions do not protect the amici's interests. Section 3(c) of the Order provides for discretionary waivers of an otherwise-barred foreign national if he or she can show that a denial of entry "would cause undue hardship, and that his or her entry would not pose a threat to national security and would be in the national interest."¹³ Neither "undue hardship" nor "national interest" is defined in the Order and the Government has provided no official guidance on how it will interpret and apply these terms. Section 3(c)(iii) provides that a waiver may be appropriate for a foreign national "enter[ing] the United States for significant business or professional obligations and [where] the denial of entry during the suspension period would impair those obligations."¹⁴ What might amount to ¹³ Exec. Order No. 13,780, 82 Fed. Reg. 13,209, 13,214 (Mar. 9, 2017) (Section 3(c)).

¹⁴ Exec. Order No. 13,780, 82 Fed. Reg. 13,209, 13,214 (Mar. 9, 2017) (Section 3(c)(iii)).

“significant business or professional obligations” is not further defined or clarified in the Order or elsewhere.

Museums plan exhibitions and performances months, and often years, in advance. The uncertainty of whether artists or other necessary personnel will receive discretionary waivers, based on ambiguous and undefined criteria, will effectively prevent the amici museums from planning many exhibitions and performances that are dependent on persons covered by the Order.¹⁵

CONCLUSION

The Order harms the amici and the public by preventing or discouraging many artists, lenders, curators, and scholars from traveling to the United States. Without their presence, amici museums will, in many cases, be unable to hold performances and showcase art originating from the Designated Countries, as well as other parts of the world—art and performances that often foster the tolerance and understanding needed to deter the kinds of conflict that the Order purports to be trying to prevent. The Court should uphold the injunction and allow this important art to be shown and performances to be held in the United States, which make a significant contribution to our culture and the richness of American society.

¹⁵ Moreover, the Order does not specify the process for obtaining a waiver. Even if the amici wanted to plan an exhibit involving a barred individual, it is unclear how they or the artist would obtain a waiver, adding further to the uncertainty the amici face.
